Exhibit 2

Below is a list of URLs of each article from the web domain motherjones.com contained in the OpenWebText training set described in the Complaint. A data scientist employed by Plaintiff's counsel identified the articles by writing a code that searched through the subfolders at the website: https://mega.nz/folder/EZZD0YwJ#9_PIEQzdMVLaNdKv_ICNVQ/folder/cc4RgQQZ, which contains the links found in OpenWebText.

The text preceding each URL in the following list indicates the subfolder in which the URL is contained, and the line of the URL within that subfolder. For example, in the first item on the list, the URL <http://motherjones.com/politics/2011/08/kevin-jennings-obama-anti-bullying-czar> is contained in the subfolder entitled RS_2011-08.bz2.deduped.txt, and is the 491st line of that subfolder.

Below is a list of URLs of each article from the web domain revealnews.org contained in the OpenWebText training set described in the Complaint. A data scientist employed by Plaintiff's counsel identified the articles by writing a code that searched through the subfolders at the website: https://mega.nz/folder/EZZD0YwJ#9_PIEQzdMVLaNdKv_ICNVQ/folder/cc4RgQQZ, which contains the links found in OpenWebText.

The text preceding each URL in the following list indicates the subfolder in which the URL is contained, and the line of the URL within that subfolder. For example, in the first item on the list, the URL <https://www.revealnews.org/article/hey-california-oklahoma-had-3-times-as-many-earthquakes-in-2014/> is contained in the subfolder entitled RS_2016-09.bz2.deduped.txt, and is the 27448th line of that subfolder.

This exhibit reports the result of the application of the Dragnet text extraction method to three URLs from revealnews.org that are listed in the OpenWebText training set described in Plaintiff's Complaint. A data scientist employed by Plaintiff's counsel followed the text extraction steps described by OpenAI in the paper Alec Radford et al., Language Models are Unsupervised Multitask Learners, 3 https://cdn.openai.com/better-language-models/language_models_are_unsupervised_multitask_learners.pdf. First, the data scientist downloaded the content of the URLs in ".html" form. He confirmed that each article, as downloaded, contained author, title, copyright notice, and terms of use information. Second, he applied the Dragnet code to the downloaded article. The results are reproduced below. Each sample begins with the URL of the webpage followed by the entire content of the copy after the application of the Dragnet code.

Example 1: <https://revealnews.org/blog/hundreds-of-marines-investigated-for-sharing-photos-of-naked-colleagues/>

The U.S. Department of Defense is investigating hundreds of Marines who used social media to solicit and share hundreds — possibly thousands — of naked photographs of female service members and veterans. Since Jan. 30, more than two dozen women — many on active duty, including officers and enlisted service members — have been identified by their full name, rank and military duty station in photographs posted and linked to from a private Facebook page. In one instance, a female corporal in uniform was followed at Camp Lejeune, North Carolina, by a fellow Marine, who surreptitiously photographed her as she picked up her gear. Those photographs were posted on the Facebook group Marines United, which has nearly 30,000 followers, drawing dozens of obscene comments. One member of the Facebook group suggested that the service member sneaking the photos should “take her out back and pound her out.” Others suggested more than vaginal sex: “And butt hole. And throat. And ears. Both of them. Video it though ... for science.” Senior officials with Headquarters Marine Corps have verified that incident, as well as the distribution of photographs of other active-duty and veteran women through the page and links to a Google Drive. Read More The photo sharing began less than a month after the first Marine infantry unit was assigned women Jan. 5. It underscores ongoing problems of sexual harassment within military ranks and could hurt recruitment of women. Officials within the Defense Department confirmed it also puts service members at risk for blackmail and jeopardizes national security. The activity on the Marines United page was uncovered by The War Horse, a nonprofit news organization run by Marine veteran Thomas Brennan. Within a day of Brennan contacting Marine Corps headquarters Jan. 30, social media accounts behind the sharing had been deleted by Facebook and Google at the Corps’ request, and a formal investigation by the Naval Criminal Investigative Service has been launched. However, it is clear that the actions taken so far have not stopped the activity: Photos of the woman followed at Camp Lejeune were posted on Marines United on Feb. 16, more than two weeks after the linking accounts had been shut down. The Marine who shot those photos has been discharged from active duty, Marine Corps officials confirmed. “We need to be brutally honest with ourselves and each other: This behavior hurts fellow Marines, family members, and civilians. It is a direct attack on our ethos and legacy,” Sgt. Maj. Ronald L. Green, the most senior enlisted Marine on active duty, wrote in an email response. “It is inconsistent with our Core Values, and it impedes our ability to perform our mission.” The service is deeply concerned about the damage the incident could do to the Marines, according to a document provided to generals Friday warning them of the upcoming story. The 10-page “Office of Marine Corps Communications Public Affairs Guidance” lists resources for victims, including a website to report crimes, and provides talking points for other media and members of Congress — who, it suggested, will want answers. It also outlines another possible blow to come: inappropriate responses from Marines. “The story will likely spark shares and discussions across social media, offering venues for Marines and former Marines who may victim blame, i.e., ‘they shouldn’t have taken the photos in the first place,’ or bemoan that they believe the Corps is becoming soft or politically correct,” it said. Facebook messages seeking comment sent today to Marines United’s current administrators were not returned. At least three of those listed on the page were aware of the activity: Two participated in comment strings about the photos and another “liked” one of them. More than 2,500 comments about the photos were left by group members, many of whom used their personal Facebook accounts that include their names, ranks and duty stations.

Some invited others to collect, identify and share photos of naked or scantily clad servicewomen. Based on their profiles, service members who participated in the photo sharing are stationed around the world — from Japan to North Carolina — and across military branches, from air wing to infantry. Dozens of now-deleted Google Drive folders linked from the Facebook page included dossiers of women containing their names, military branches, nude photographs, screenshots of their social media accounts and images of sexual acts. Dozens of other subfolders included unidentifiable women in various stages of undress. Many images appear to have originated from the consensual, but private, exchange of racy images, some clearly taken by the women themselves. After the accounts were deleted, the Marine Corps contacted the employer of the Marine veteran who initially posted the Google Drive link on Marines United. He was fired from his position as a government subcontractor in the United States, according to Maj. Clark Carpenter, a Marine Corps spokesman. The War Horse has spoken with five of the women in the photographs. Two said they believe former partners might have leaked images. Some said they worry their own accounts might have been hacked or poached. One said a co-worker, a male Marine, alerted her to the fact that the photographs had been posted. The corporal photographed at Camp Lejeune learned she had been stalked only after The War Horse sought comment from military officials. But she said she thinks she remembers the man. She spoke on condition of anonymity, nervous about reprisal and becoming more of a target. “He was standing close enough to smell my perfume,” she said. “This is going to follow me – just like he did.” The Marines United Facebook page has been around since 2015 and limits membership to male Marines, Navy corpsmen and British Royal Marines. The group has a code of conduct pinned to the top of its page: no discussing Marines United; no threats, harm or harassment; and no racist and illegal posts. The thousands of images gathered by some group members reveal information about hundreds of female veterans and service members, including social media handles and where they are stationed. These acts violate not only the group’s stated code of conduct, but also Facebook’s terms of use. The initial link on the page to the image collection read: “Here you go, you thirsty fucks ... this is just the tip of the iceberg. There is more coming.” Within one minute, commenters began posting: “Holy fuck, there is a god.” The federal employee – the one who has since been fired – posted a response: “Anyone can contribute. They just have to (private message) me for their own personal upload link.” Some Marines promised free beer to contributors. Many tagged friends. One seemed to be tracking the number of photos submitted, writing, “Over 400 more pictures added,” to which he received the response, “Well Done Marine!” “I know one of these chicks, her name is ...” read another of the hundreds of comments. “Check her out boys.” This distribution of photographs without the women’s consent can threaten their mental health, according to Dr. Frank Ochberg, a psychiatrist, founding board member of the International Society for Traumatic Stress Studies and former associate director of the National Institute of Mental Health. “It impairs the ideal of a brotherhood and sisterhood, being able to count on somebody,” said Ochberg, who pioneered the post-traumatic stress disorder diagnosis in 1980. “Within the military, this is a violation of family. ... There are few organizations held to such esteem as the Marine Corps. They stand for honor, courage and commitment. “This destroys honor. ... This is sadistic. ... This is disloyalty.” In recent years, the armed forces have implemented programs and protocols to respond to reports of sexual harassment, assault and equal opportunity violations. But Marine Corps officials confirmed that none include procedures for dealing with sexual exploitation of this nature. In 2013, U.S. Rep. Jackie Speier, D-Calif., brought a similar problem to the Marines’ attention, an incident noted in the public affairs document sent to generals Friday. In that case, comments denigrating women were posted on a Facebook page. Gen. James Amos, then-commandant of the Marine Corps, responded by citing the difficulties in monitoring and tracking social media to investigate offensive content, as well as inadequate funding. Speier would have none of it, saying his response was “frankly unacceptable.” Subsequently, the Marines posted an article defining Marine social media misconduct and mined Facebook, identifying “12 additional Marines allegedly linked to racist, sexist, and/or otherwise inappropriate social media misconduct,” the public affairs document says. “Information about these incidents were provided to unit commanders for appropriate action.” The Marine Corps and Department of Defense aren’t the only federal agencies battling sexual exploitation. In 2013, Julia Pierson was the first woman to be appointed as director of the U.S. Secret Service. During her tenure, Pierson faced congressional criticism for a security breach at the White House in 2014, and she worked to improve the agency’s image following a prostitution scandal involving 11 agents. Pierson told The War Horse that her experiences with civilian law enforcement and the Secret Service have proven that “there’s always a double standard.” These images, she said, “aren’t going away and (next time) they’re going to have an entry fee. “This is way beyond stupidity and boys being boys,” she said. The Marines needs to take steps to restore the credibility of their organization, Pierson said. “They need to realize that this is an entirely new threat,” she said. “This is a coordinated attack on the organization. ... This is a hunting club.” The War Horse submitted multiple requests for additional comment to the defense secretary and commandant of the Marine Corps. Both declined to comment on specifics of the situation, citing the ongoing investigation. However, in his email, Green added additional perspective, repeatedly denouncing the “demeaning or degrading behavior” of Marines United members and encouraging Marines — and all service members — to be “a voice of change” for the better. “As Marines, as human beings, you should be angry for the actions of a few,” Green wrote. “Ultimately we must take a look in the mirror and decide whether we are part of the problem or the solution.” “We need to realize that silence is consent — do not be silent.”

Two weeks after last year's presidential election, white nationalist Richard Spencer held forth on a cable news show about how white people built America. "White people ultimately don't need other races in order to succeed," he told the audience of the black-oriented program, "NewsOne Now ." The exchange grew heated as host Roland Martin questioned Spencer's rhetoric: Didn't slaves help build America? Wasn't the nation's 19th-century economic boom propelled by the slave labor that produced the world's cotton on Southern plantations? America's rise was "not through black people" and "has nothing to do with slavery," Spencer retorted. "White people could have figured out another way to pick cotton," he said. "We do it now." He is in a position to know. Spencer, along with his mother and sister, are absentee landlords of 5,200 acres of cotton and corn fields in an impoverished, largely African American region of Louisiana, according to records examined by Reveal from The Center for Investigative Reporting. The farms, controlled by multiple family-owned businesses, are worth millions: A 1,600-acre parcel sold for $4.3 million in 2012. The Spencer family's farms also are subsidized heavily by the federal government. From 2008 through 2015, the Spencers received $2 million in U.S. farm subsidy payments, according to federal data. USDA farm subsidy payments to Spencer family companies, 2008-2015 Farm Payments Dickenhorst Farms $1,014,558 Spencer Farms $524,655 Dickenhorst Trust $201,460 Sher-Di-Je Land $165,029 Poor Richard Partnership $98,878 A-Renee Partnership $78,016 Total $2,082,596 Source: U.S. Department of Agriculture data compiled by the Environmental Working Group Although Spencer has attracted extensive media attention as a leader of the so-called alt-right movement – particularly after he drew Nazi salutes at an event celebrating Donald Trump's election – he never has explained publicly how he supports himself while actively promoting his agenda via conferences and media appearances. The finances of his nonprofit think tank, the National Policy Institute, are a mystery; the organization hasn't filed a public report since 2013. On Monday, the Los Angeles Times reported that the IRS revoked the institute's tax-exempt status. Spencer, 38, is a dropout from a Duke University Ph.D. history program who emerged during the Trump campaign as one of the nation's most visible white separatist agitators. In his writing, speeches and interviews, he has given an intellectualized explanation for how he came to advocate creating a whites-only "ethno state" in North America. While in graduate school, he has said, he was compelled by critiques of multiculturalism and political correctness and by demographic data indicating that whites are en route to minority status in the United States. But the Spencer family's business interests and geographic history suggest a different possible lineage for Richard Spencer's racist politics. The family's farm holdings are a legacy of its ties to the Jim Crow South, passed down by Spencer's grandfather, who built the business during the turbulent civil rights era. "I'm not involved in any direct day-to-day running of the business," he said, later adding: "I'm going to navigate the world as it is, and I'm not going to be a pauper." One Spencer family farming company, which holds title to 400 acres of land, is called the Poor Richard Partnership. In the interview, Spencer also downplayed his family's influence on his political views, saying, "My parents are very mainstream Episcopalian Republicans in Dallas." Although Spencer grew up in an affluent neighborhood of Dallas and now splits his time between Montana and Washington, D.C., his family lived in the South for generations. Records show his mother attended segregated schools as a girl in the small northeast Louisiana city of Monroe. Later, Spencer's mother inherited farms in northeast Louisiana from her late father. Today, her two children are her business partners. Spencer's mother did not respond to an email and voicemails seeking comment for this story. In the past, she has said she does not share her son's views. In an open letter sent to their local newspaper in December, Spencer's parents, Sherry and Rand, said that while they love their son, "we are not racists. We have never been racists. We do not endorse the idea of white nationalism." The region that is home to the Spencers' farms has a history of slavery and racism. Through the civil rights era, the Klan targeted black residents there with lynchings, cross burnings and other violence. In Tensas Parish, where the Spencers own 3,000 acres of farmland, blacks didn't win the right to vote until 1964, according to Elvadás Fields Jr., mayor of the town of St. Joseph. White supremacist views typically run in the family, said writer and race relations expert Cleo Scott Brown. Feelings of racial superiority often are passed "from generation to generation, because that's what they believe," said Brown, whose father – a civil rights leader in East Carroll Parish, where the Spencers own 900 acres of farmland – was shot and wounded during a 1962 voter registration drive, allegedly by a member of the Ku Klux Klan. Agribusiness in the region today is heavily mechanized and provides few jobs. In 2013, CNN reported that East Carroll Parish suffers from the worst income inequality in the nation: The richest 5 percent of residents earned an average of $611,000 per year, 90 times what the poorest 20 percent earned. The parish's population is 67 percent black. Sources: U.S. Department of Agriculture data compiled by the Environmental Working Group; Louisiana secretary of state filings Race relations have improved significantly in recent decades. But after Trump's election, some white residents celebrated by draping their pickup trucks with Confederate flags and driving through the region's towns, according to the Rev. Roosevelt Grant, head of the NAACP branch in Winnsboro, Franklin Parish, near another of the Spencers' farms. The Trump presidency, he said, "has caused people to pray more." Spencer's maternal grandfather, Dr. R.W. Dickenhorst, established the family farming business. He was a radiologist who started a medical practice in Monroe in 1952 and became wealthy and socially prominent, according to local newspaper obituaries. Racial segregation was a given in Monroe then. Blacks were barred from housing, schools and public facilities used by whites. White superiority "was the way of life; that was the way it was, and anyone challenging it was challenging God's will," said the Rev. Roosevelt Wright Jr., a local historian in Monroe. Dickenhorst's daughter, Sherry, who would grow up to be Richard Spencer's mother, enrolled in all-white Neville High School in 1962, according to district records. In 1964, at the start of her junior year, integration of the school began, with a single African American student enrolling. As Dickenhorst's medical practice prospered, he bought farmland in northeast Louisiana on the Mississippi River's west bank. He died decades later, in 2002, and his wife died the following year. By then, their only daughter was the wife of a wealthy Dallas eye surgeon and the mother of two grown children: Richard Spencer and his sister, who did not respond to an email and phone calls seeking comment. Today, through Dickenhorst Farms and several related companies, Sherry Spencer, 68, and her two children jointly own most of the family farmland, according to U.S. Department of Agriculture data compiled by the nonprofit Environmental Working Group. Sherry Spencer is general partner of Dickenhorst Farms, and Richard Spencer and his sister are part owners, according to state and federal records . The family contracts out crop production to local farmers, a common practice in a region where corporations and absentee owners control much of the land. The Spencer family's farms are headquartered at a $3 million home in the ski town of Whitefish, Montana, where Sherry Spencer now lives. Also headquartered there: Richard Spencer's think tank , his AltRight.com website and other white nationalist-related enterprises he controls, including a book publisher and web design outfit. Spencer also has lived in Whitefish in recent years — sometimes in his mother's home, sometimes in a condominium she owns, according to documents and interviews. The Spencers have received payments from two federal farm programs. One is the commodity subsidy program, intended to guarantee income for farmers who are helping to maintain supplies of certain crops deemed important by the government. The other is the conservation reserve program, which pays farmers for environmentally sound farming practices. Most of the $2 million paid to the Spencers has been in commodity subsidy payments for growing cotton. Yet, Spencer has been bitterly critical of America and its government. “This is a sick, disgusting society,” he declared in his speech at an alt-right gathering in Washington after the election, “run by the corrupt, defended by hysterics, drunk on self-hatred and degeneracy.” Reveal producer Emily Harris, Reveal host Al Letson and freelance reporters Jade Williamson and Vladimir Jakovljevic contributed to this story. Example 3: <https://revealnews.org/blog/a-readers-guide-to-the-jehovahs-witnesses-child-sex-abuse-scandal/>

Jehovah's Witnesses leaders are fighting on multiple fronts to hide what they know about child sexual abusers in their religion. Facing more than a dozen civil lawsuits in the United States and a government investigation in the United Kingdom, the Witnesses are continuing to withhold court-ordered documents from authorities. In England this month, the religious organization went to court for a fourth time attempting to block investigators from looking at their child abuse records. It's been just over a year since Reveal began publishing and broadcasting stories about Jehovah's Witnesses covering up child sexual abuse. Since our first story aired, hundreds of Witnesses and ex-Witnesses have contacted us, mostly to share their stories. We're continuing to report on the issue, but in the meantime, here's a quick rundown of nine major findings so far:

1. For more than 25 years, the global leadership of the Jehovah's Witnesses has instructed elders to keep cases of child sexual abuse secret from law enforcement and members of their own congregations.
2. The Witnesses' parent corporation, the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, issued the directives in a series of confidential memos dating back to 1989. The child abuse memos were approved by the Watchtower's governing body, a group of men who are the spiritual leaders of the religion, like the Pope in the Catholic Church.
3. Instead of reporting child abuse to law enforcement, elders form their own judicial committees to deal with child abusers. The process can include having the victim confront the alleged abuser in person.
4. Watchtower policy directs elders not to take any action against an accused child abuser unless the abuser confesses or there are two witnesses to the abuse.
5. The Watchtower argues that its child abuse policies are based on Scripture and that police and court scrutiny violate the organization's First Amendment rights.
6. The Watchtower says its elders report child abuse in states where they are required to by law. In many states, they get around those laws by invoking a loophole that allows clergy to keep quiet about spiritual confessions – even when the issue is first raised by a victim, not an abuser.
7. Dozens of current and former members told Reveal that they were threatened with disfellowshipping – the Witnesses' version of excommunication – if they spoke up about child abuse. Once a Witness has been disfellowshipped, he or she is shunned by all other Witnesses, including family, friends and employers. (The Watchtower says it does not discourage victims from reporting their own abuse.)
8. The Watchtower has gone to extreme lengths to hide what it knows about child abuse. Since 1997, the Watchtower has required all elders who learn of child sexual abuse in their congregations to report it to the the organization's headquarters in New York. The Watchtower keeps the names and whereabouts of known or suspected child abusers in an electronic database. The Watchtower has twice violated subpoenas by refusing to produce the database in civil court. Meanwhile, no federal agencies have stepped in to obtain the list.
9. The Watchtower's policies have allowed child abusers to move freely in communities around the world. Government commissions in England and Australia currently are investigating the Watchtower's child abuse policies in those countries. The Australian commission found that since 1950, the Witnesses have covered up the crimes of more than 1,000 child sexual abusers. Investigators in England have not yet released any findings. Exhibit 5

This exhibit reports the result of the application of the Newspaper text extraction method to three URLs from motherjones.com and three URLs from revealnews.org that are listed in the OpenWebText training set described in Plaintiff's Complaint. A data scientist employed by Plaintiff's counsel followed the text extraction steps described by OpenAI in the paper Alec Radford et al., Language Models are Unsupervised Multitask Learners, 3 https://cdn.openai.com/better-language-models/language_models_are_unsupervised_multitask_learners.pdf. First, the data scientist downloaded the content of the URLs in ".html" form. He confirmed that each article, as downloaded, contained author, title, copyright notice, and terms of use information. Second, he applied the Newspaper code to the downloaded article. Based on the assumption that OpenAI desired the Newspaper extraction method to be consistent with the Dragnet extraction method, and the fact that the Dragnet extraction method does not extract author and title information, he used a version of the Newspaper code designed not to extract author and title information. The results are reproduced below. Each sample begins with the URL of the webpage followed by the entire content of the copy after the application of the Newspaper code.

Mother Jones Example 1: <https://www.motherjones.com/politics/2011/08/gary-johnson-for-president/>

Fight disinformation: Sign up for the free Mother Jones Daily newsletter and follow the news that matters.

The race for the Republican presidential nomination does not appear to be going well for Gary Johnson. According to the most recent Zogby poll, the libertarian former two-term New Mexico governor, climber of Mount Everest, and consumer of medical marijuana is polling at 1 percent among likely GOP presidential primary voters nationwide. That's 24 points behind front-runner Rep. Michele Bachmann (R-Minn.); 10 points behind fellow libertarian Rep. Ron Paul (R-Texas); and 1 point behind former Speaker Newt Gingrich, who at this point is basically just trying to sell more copies of his books. Johnson is trailing Fred Karger, the gay former dark-arts operative who is running solely for the sake of hounding Mitt Romney, by 1 point.

But if you ask Gary Johnson, he is exactly where he wants to be. "The vantage point that I have is the only vantage point that I've ever had in politics, which is being last," Johnson explained on Friday following an address to the National Conference of College Republicans in downtown Washington. "I've run for two political offices in my life: governor of New Mexico, and reelection as governor of New Mexico. This was just where I was in New Mexico."

Johnson was in town last week for some fundraising and glad-handing. He met with South Carolina Sen. Jim DeMint, the tea party's best friend in Congress, on Thursday, and spoke to the College Republicans the next morning. But despite being excluded from the first New Hampshire presidential debate, Johnson believes things are starting to look up.

"You need to understand yourself whether or not you have momentum," Johnson says. "If you can't ascertain that, why, that's kind of the key to life. You can't kid yourself: Either you have it, or you don't have it. And exceeding expectations would be exceeding what people are expecting of you." And does Johnson have momentum? "Oh, yeah. I'm not expecting anyone to know that, and I don't want to sound silly for saying that's something that I have when others wouldn't acknowledge it at all, but again this is very corollary to having run for governor of New Mexico. The primary was in June of 1994. In February they did a poll in New Mexico, asking who would you vote for on the Republican ticket? And I got 2 percent of the votes. We were ecstatic." Johnson's not sure what those expectations will be, but he suggests that somewhere in the top four in libertarian New Hampshire would be a start. His plan is to focus all of his energy on the Granite State for the next 6 1/2 months, skipping, for the most part, Iowa's first-in-the-nation caucuses.

It's a war of attrition. "There are 128 candidates on the Republican side of the ticket right now," Johnson says, fudging the numbers just a tad—and no one else is talking like him. It's only a matter of time before people figure that out.

"You need to understand yourself whether or not you have momentum. If you can't ascertain that, why, that's kind of the key to life."

Johnson's political views overlap with Republicans and Democrats in a way that makes him an imprecise fit for either—he's mostly pro-choice (except for late-term abortions) and anti-war (unless we're being attacked); he'd also like cut entitlement spending by about 40 percent in the short term and eliminate gun regulations. And then there's the economy. While Romney has stayed noticeably silent on the debt ceiling, Johnson is taking a hardline approach: "I would not raise the debt ceiling. I think, you know for all the talk about balancing the budget and for all the talk about not printing money, this isn't a mechanism to make that happen. And I do not want to downplay the problems associated with not raising the debt ceiling, but I just think that those problems will end up paling in comparing with the monetary collapse of this country."

Johnson's fear, ultimately, is that the United States is careening toward a full-scale monetary collapse that will make the consequences of not raising the debt ceiling seem trivial. So what exactly would that collapse look like? Are we talking survival seed banks? Yes. "That's ultimately what you're looking at. What it looks like is needing a wheelbarrow full of money to buy a loaf of bread." He offers to show me the Zimbabwean million-dollar bill he keeps in pocket at all times. "The monetary collapse is when the United States steps in and prints money to cover their entire obligation. Recently that number has been as high as 70 percent, printing money. It's not a great outlook, and to me it's just the writing on the wall." If you imagine America turning into some sort of combination of The Hunger Games and Weimar Germany, slashing Social Security by 40 percent, as Johnson proposes, suddenly doesn't seem like such a big deal.

The governor has a knack for spin that's requisite for any candidate for higher office, but he's also got less of a filter, and is noticeably exasperated at some his competitors' antics. For instance, he thinks Herman Cain's fixation on the threat of Islamic Shariah law—and perhaps Herman Cain himself—is a waste of time. "I don't see it happening," he says. "I've never seen or smelled a whiff of it. It's a nonexistent issue as far as I'm concerned. And when Herman Cain answers the first question at the South Carolina debate about what he would do in Iraq and Afghanistan by saying he would consult with his advisers, gosh." Ditto for the party's focus on social issues—the Iowa Family Leader's anti-gay-marriage pledge, he says, "is the reason why the world doesn't like Republicans." I asked about the rise of China, which has prompted some tea partiers, including Rep. Allen West (R-Fla.), to call for an arms race. "When people understand that the United States spends 52 cents out of the worldwide dollar on military spending and that China spends 9 cents, what arms race are we gonna engage them in? I mean really, is China a threat? No, they're not."

The Iowa Family Leader's anti-gay-marriage pledge, Johnson says, "is the reason why the world doesn't like Republicans."

While Johnson says he respects Texas Gov. Rick Perry, a likely 2012 foe, he says America's not ready for another Texas governor and he doesn't think Perry's August 4th prayer rally is such a great idea. "I think events like that alienate a whole lot of people that don't have to be alienated. If it's a personal kind of situation that I'm leading by example holding this prayer vigil, that's one thing, but if it's somehow political, I don't think people really like Republicans who are doing that publicly, linking that to public policy."

As for his support for marijuana legalization, the issue that defined his second term as governor (when Drug Czar Barry McCaffrey called him “anathema to America’s parents”), Johnson isn’t backing down. “We’re two years away from being at a national statistical tipping point,” he says. “So this is the kind of an issue that, and I’m just gonna state the obvious, does really well when people talk about it. The more information that goes along with this issue, the better it does.” (Two years would of course push the tipping point beyond the November election). That support for legalization echoes the larger philosophy he’s basing his candidacy on:

I wish the Republican party would become known as the party of choice. That very simply you could identify where a Republican would come down on any issue as, well, Republicans are always going to support your ability as an individual to choose, whether it be education, whether it be what it is you eat or drink, whether it’s what you put in your body or don’t put in your body, how tax dollars get spent.

Although he doesn’t think anyone else in the GOP field is presidential material, Johnson says he won’t consider voting for Obama, and he’s not entertaining the idea of running as an independent or on a third-party ticket (as Paul once did). “Absolutely not. The idea here is to win, and I don’t win as a third-party candidate. The only candidate that comes to mind that might be a formidable role in a third-party role would be somebody like [New York City Mayor Michael] Bloomberg, who could put a kajillion dollars of their money into doing that.” And anyway, he’s got a pretty good backup plan if, as the polls suggest, he falls flat in New Hampshire.

“I’ll go back to living north of Taos. I live there because the skiing there is as good as anywhere on the planet and that’s my passion. So I’ll just go back to adventuring and athletics.” Adventuring is Johnson’s term for various pursuits, including mountaineering (up Mount Everest in 2003) and paragliding (which left him severely injured in 2005 and led him to a three-year trial run of medical marijuana). I asked him about his hometown’s other claim to fame: a paranormal phenomenon known as the Taos hum—a low pitched drone that feels, as one Taos resident once told me, “like being able to hear the mountains.” Does Johnson feel The Hum?

“Oh totally. All the time!” He clarifies, at this point, that he’s being tongue in cheek, and not simply off his rocker. But then he starts to hum loudly. “Have I ever heard it? Yes.”

There is a term of art that was often used during the mortgage boom: “I’ll be gone, you’ll be gone,” or “IBGYBG.” In the mortgage business, it meant that however bad or risky or outright fraudulent a mortgage was, the person who originated it didn’t have to worry—he’d have sold it and moved on long before the borrower was the wiser. The people to whom broker sold the mortgage wouldn’t be held responsible, either—after all, they weren’t responsible for the fraud.

Lillie Mae Washington, who is 96 and lives in West Los Angeles, knows all too much about IBGYBG. Since September 2008, when Washington first sued her mortgage servicer, lender, escrow agent, and others for mortgage fraud, she has been trapped in a legal hell. She has represented herself, been represented pro bono, and now pays a lawyer to handle her case. The suit has been handled by at least seven judges, and the docket runs 104 documents long in federal court alone.

In all that time, no one that Washington has sued has argued that her mortgage was entirely by-the-book. It’s just that no one cares that it probably wasn’t.

That includes Ocwen, Washington’s mortgage servicer, which she says has been trying for over a year to evict her from the home where she has lived for nearly four decades. Washington paid Ocwen—a giant company that services hundreds of thousands of mortgages in all 50 states, often on behalf of big Wall Street banks that hold the mortgages—as long as she could afford to, but the payments were more than three times higher than what she expected when she signed the mortgage documents. A judge’s mediation order temporarily stopped Washington from being kicked out late last month, but her lawyer is far from confident that she won’t be asked to leave again.

Many of the original defendants in Washington’s case are now either insolvent or out of business—in short, they’re gone. But the documents in Washington’s case make it clear that the defendants believe they can’t be held responsible for fraud at mortgage origination. Mitch Abdallah, Washington’s latest lawyer, doesn’t see it that way. “Once you’re responsible for a bad act,” he says, “you can’t wash your hands of the taint by simply signing the dirty document to someone else.”

“At this stage in life we’re not supposed to have this happening,” Washington told me by phone last Friday. “At this stage in life there should not be all this going on.”

Washington’s story starts the way many similar tales of alleged mortgage fraud do: with a call from a salesman.

In October 2006, a representative from a company called Home Loans Direct called Washington’s home and arranged an appointment to visit. Washington’s son Hobert, who was a co-owner of the house, had already signed the mortgage separately, without Lillie Mae's knowledge. Hobert Washington was suffering from Alzheimer's, and his "cognitive impairment would have been immediately visible and obvious to anyone who spoke and interacted with him," according to court documents. Hobert had incontinence problems, an eye that bulged out of its socket, and fell frequently, says his brother, Bobby Washington.

Hobert "invited the lenders into her home," Abdallah says. "The son suffered from Alzheimer's, so he wasn't in the best of shape to be giving advice or counseling his mother. They sat down and offered her a loan that she probably shouldn't have taken and was filled with representations that aren't accurate."

According to court filings, the salesman came to Washington's house and promised that she could get a fixed-rate loan at "about 6 percent," pay "no more than $700 a month," and even get $80,000 for repairs. He said the payments would not start for six months. Washington signed on the dotted line.

According to legal documents, the loan agent had Washington sign a standard mortgage form without even showing her key documents that outlined information on how much she was borrowing, how much interest she'd be paying, and how much her payments would be.

Perhaps Washington was foolish to rely on the salesman's verbal representations, but federal law is clear. It requires that disclosures about mortgage terms be made "clearly and conspicuously," "grouped together," "in writing," and "in a form the consumer may keep," all "before consummation of the transaction." Washington alleges that the disclosures made to her failed to meet many of those conditions.

Home Loans Direct, the company that allegedly sold Washington the mortgage, no longer has a real estate license. It surrendered the license in 2008 during a state investigation, according to records from the California Department of Real Estate. In addition, one of the company's officers, Jorge Ricardo Cruz, had his license suspended and later revoked. A California Department of Real Estate document [PDF] obtained by Mother Jones explains that Home Loans Direct surrendered its license after deciding not to contest allegations that it:

knowingly advertised, printed, displayed, published, distributed, or caused or permitted to be advertised, printed, displayed, published, distributed, statements or representations with regard to the rates, terms, or conditions for making, purchasing, or negotiating loans on real property which were false, misleading, or deceptive.

The Home Loans Direct salesman promised to send copies of the mortgage documents to Washington after she signed. But when Washington's son Bobby called the firm to follow up, he got two unsigned notes in the mail, promising that the Washingtons would be able to "recast the loan to a more comfortable payment" in six months and that "everything will be alright."

Needless to say, the loan wasn't what Lillie Mae thought it was. That November, Lillie Mae and Bobby were celebrating Thanksgiving with family upstate when a call came in from Hobert's ex-wife, who was caring for him. “She said, ‘Sit down,’” Bobby recalled. ““Your payment is due next month and it’s $2,582.29.’ It ruined the whole weekend.”

When the Washingtons finally received copies of the loan paperwork in late November, they realized they’d been screwed. The interest rate was actually over 9 percent, and the loan was adjustable—later, the rate would could climb to nearly 12 percent. The Washingtons would get $95,909.25 in cash out, significantly more than the $80,000 they had been promised. The final loan documents also included a form from a notary attesting that Hobert and his mother had appeared before her together. Washington says she never saw a notary and has never been to Hacienda Heights, where the notary was registered. (Attempts to locate the notary were unsuccessful.)

“They came and took advantage,” Bobby says. “They played this game of lies.”

Most of the defense lawyers involved with the case didn’t return calls and emails asking for their clients’ side of the story. Brent Kramer, who represents Ocwen and several other defendants, referred me to the documents available in the case and otherwise declined comment.

Selling mortgages to low-income borrowers based on a misleading monthly payment was a common practice during the mortgage boom, says Prentiss Cox, a law professor at the University of Minnesota who is an expert in mortgage fraud. “Sales tactics were highly aggressive and the terms of the loans were complex and confusing,” Cox says. “It was almost always someone coming to them, promising them lower monthly payments, and then giving them a mortgage that had hard-to-understand back-end costs. The monthly payment didn’t reflect the true long-term cost of the loan.”

The Washingtons, panicked and confused about their rights, searched high and low for a way out. Bobby, who worked in a nonlegal capacity at a big law firm in Los Angeles, asked his colleagues for help. Lillie Mae sent a letter to the mortgage company disputing the terms of the loan. In the meantime, the Washingtons decided to use the cash out to pay their mortgage bills.

Bobby’s coworkers told him he and Lillie Mae had at least 10 different federal and state causes of action. They passed his case on to another big downtown law firm, which took the case pro bono but didn’t actually file suit until September 2008. Meanwhile, things were only getting worse for the Washingtons. Ocwen denied a request to cancel the loan based on fraud at origination. The Washingtons continued to drain the cash-out money to pay their bills. In October 2009, the Washingtons ran out of money, and they stopped paying the loan. A month later, Hobert Washington was dead, and Lillie Mae was on the hook for the entire loan.

Lillie Mae and Bobby Washington want to stay in their home. “It’s not modern but it’s home,” she says. “You’ve got a roof over your head at least, got a yard you can go out in. I’m just trying to keep everything under control.”

Sometime in the '50s, the story goes, a small plane ran into engine trouble over Bethesda, Maryland, and was forced to crash-land near the 18th hole of a bucolic golf club. Employees rushed to the scene, and—upon discovering that the pilot was a woman—had her “very gingerly and gallantly” removed from the grounds.

Three decades later, when a visiting head of state showed up at the same golf club with a complement of Secret Service agents, the lone woman among them couldn't set foot on the property. In 1981, a new Supreme Court appointee with a love of golf and a 12 handicap—Sandra Day O'Connor—became the first justice not to be offered a membership. That same chivalry has since been extended to Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Sonia Sotomayor.

Honorary membership at Burning Tree Club is not to be sneezed at, seeing as how the initiation fee is north of $75,000, plus another $6,000 per year and tips for the caddie. Still, not all male Supreme Court justices in recent years have accepted the club's offer, though Antonin Scalia did. So did presidents Franklin Roosevelt, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Ford, and George H.W. Bush. Indeed, according to an encyclopedic 2003 ESPN.com piece by Greg Garber, Ike was persuaded to run for office by fellow club members and subsequently “spent so much time at ‘The Tree’ that a hot line was installed between the White House and the pro shop.”

Barring some Americans from the clubhouse stems from the same part of the cortex as barring others from the lunch counter.

We were moved to take this detour into archaic Washington folkways because of June's debt ceiling “golf summit” between President Obama and Speaker John Boehner, which, as some reporters noted, took place at the Andrews Air Force Base course because the president couldn't very well play Boehner's regular club—Burning Tree.

Deep breath. Okay. It is 2011. Boehner is the speaker of the House. The body that is supposed to, more than any other, represent the people—all the people—of the United States of America. Yet 91 years after women won the right to vote and 40 years after our mothers fought for more than token access to the levers of power, the signal the man second in line for the presidency intends to send to 51 percent of the nation, 40 percent of Republicans, and his own daughters is...well, we're too ladylike to say.

And yes, intends: The optics of belonging to one of America's last 24 boys-only golf clubs have been brought to Boehner's attention many, many times before. Evidently, Neanderthal sexism is simply another thing he refuses to compromise on.

But don't feel left out, guys: The speaker's contempt is not confined to those of the female persuasion. From the glass ceiling to the debt ceiling, Boehner and the rest of the GOP brass are not only ignoring the needs of the majority of Americans, they are actively flipping all of us the bird. And that is something new.

Back in the innocent days of yore—say, six months ago—a politician who did not at least lip-synch concern for the welfare of the American people in the event of an economic tailspin would have gotten a drubbing in the press and a talking-to from his caucus leader. Now? It's the caucus leader himself who brutally spells out the priorities: No. 1, says Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, is ensuring that Obama is “a one-term president.” No. 2 is protecting “your [Republican] brand.” That's right—the reason to worry about a downturn that could kill millions of jobs and wipe out what's left of our retirement and housing values is that it might interfere with GOP positioning.

Which takes us back to golf. George W. Bush gave up the game after starting the Iraq War. Boehner's cohorts seem less worried about looking out of touch: Just in the past two years, the speaker's Freedom Project PAC has spent more than $170,000 on golf, $64,000 at the Naples, Florida, Ritz-Carlton alone!

It's worth noting here that Boehner doesn't come to this callousness by dint of entitlement—one of 12 siblings, he was the first in his family to go to college—which makes his constant gestures of fealty to elites all the more striking. His attire the night he told the nation that he was protecting “the jobs and savings of Americans” by setting us on the path to economic calamity? Navy blazer, oxford shirt, kelly-green tie. Preppy Handbook, anyone?

So, note to President Obama: golf summit, sure. But don't forget that barring some Americans from the clubhouse stems from the same part of the cortex as barring others from the lunch counter. The foundational impulse for both is that fairness matters less than power.

Boehner may be, as the president has said, “a good man who wants to do right by the country.” But it all depends, as a previous president might have noted, on what the definition of “the country” is. In today's Republican Party, that definition has shrunk to its narrowest point in at least half a century. And that, in the end, is John Boehner's true handicap.

Reveal Example 1: <https://revealnews.org/article/scientists-say-trumps-border-wall-would-devastate-wildlife-habitat/>

HIDALGO, Texas — Muddy handprints cover the rusty, iron posts on this section of border fence in far South Texas. The 18-foot-tall barrier, which runs between a national wildlife refuge and a local nature center, ends abruptly less than a mile down the road. Still, somebody clearly thought it was best to cross here.

“This is probably one of the most visible places they could have climbed,” Scott Nicol, co-chair of the Sierra Club’s Borderlands Campaign, said before snapping photos of the handprints. “I don’t know if they got caught or not, but they made it up and over for sure.”

There’s been a lot of debate about how effective the President George W. Bush-era barrier has been at keeping out illegal crossers and drug smugglers. Some data indicate the barriers have encouraged people to cross in places where there isn’t one. But the handprints show that a determined person can still easily scale it.

What the border fence has kept out instead, according to environmentalists, scientists and local officials, is wildlife. And the people who have spent decades acquiring and restoring border habitat say that if President Donald Trump makes good on his promise to turn the border fence into a continuous 40-foot concrete wall, the situation for wildlife along the border – one of the most biodiverse areas in North America – will only get worse.

Right now, a mix of vehicle barriers and pedestrian fencing covers only about one-third of the nearly 2,000-mile U.S.-Mexico border. Even with all those gaps, experts say the barriers have made it harder for animals to find food, water and mates. Many of them, like jaguars, gray wolves and ocelots, are already endangered.

Aaron Flesch, a biologist at the University of Arizona, said most border animals are already squeezed into small, fragmented patches of habitat.

“If you just go and you cut movements off,” he said, “you can potentially destabilize these entire networks of population.”

Still, the impacts of the border fence on wildlife aren’t totally understood. That’s in large part because Congress let the U.S. Department of Homeland Security ignore all the environmental laws that would’ve required the agency to fully study how the barrier would affect wildlife.

Flesch and other scientists say the federal government also has made almost no research money available to support independent studies. Most of the studies that have been done are limited in scope, but their findings are pretty clear: Impeding animal movements puts them on a faster path to extinction.

Environmentalists and conservation groups say the border fence also has compromised the federal government's own efforts to protect those vulnerable species, pitting the U.S. Department of Homeland Security against the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. The latter agency bought large tracts of land along the border decades ago and turned them into national wildlife refuges.

A spokeswoman for the Fish and Wildlife Service said the agency is not studying the environmental impacts of the proposed border wall and referred the Tribune to Customs and Border Patrol. That agency told the Tribune that "at this point we don't have anything to share."

A fast-tracked fence

When you envision the U.S.-Mexico border, you might think of a barren, dusty desert. But it actually ranks among the most biodiverse places in North America – particularly the Rio Grande Valley in South Texas. The Valley is home to some of the last remaining tracts of sabal palm forest in the country – a lush, subtropical ecosystem that is prime habitat for an endangered wild cat called the ocelot.

Two major migratory bird paths also converge in the region, and several tropical bird species there can't be found anywhere else in the United States. More than 100 other endangered species may be impacted by construction of a wall along the U.S.-Mexico border, according to an analysis of U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service data.

During his first presidential run, Barack Obama vowed to review Bush's directive to build the fence – which was still under construction when he took office – in part due to potential environmental impacts. That never happened, even after a presidential advisory committee urged him to study the issue before Homeland Security installed any more barrier segments.

Decades-old laws like the Endangered Species Act often tie up major federal projects for decades or thwart them altogether, but a 2005 security and immigration law that Congress passed gave Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff the power to waive all those regulations – which he did in 2008.

The existing border fence went up in just a few years. That left scientists scrambling to measure the impacts themselves – racing to try to measure animal movements before the fence was installed so they could compare them with what happened afterward.

Because the wall went up so quickly, "We didn't have any good environmental studies of this area to establish a baseline," said Laura Huffman, director of the Nature Conservancy's Texas office. As a result, "it's hard to comment on where we are today. And there was a lot of concern about that."

The studies

At the 18-foot pedestrian fence in Hidalgo, the posts are positioned less than 2 inches apart — far too narrow for even small critters to squeeze through. Flesch's research found that the fence also blocks the threatened pygmy owl, which can only fly a few feet above the ground.

The Nature Conservancy's Southmost Preserve in far South Texas is home to some of the last remaining stands of sabal palm forest in the country. Jesse Lasky, a biologist at Penn State University who studied the impacts of the fence on mammals, reptiles and amphibians, found that the U.S.-Mexico barrier reduced the range for some species by as much as 75 percent. Impacts were particularly acute on smaller populations of wildlife that occur in more specialized habitats like the endangered jaguarundi — another small wild cat.

“Mountain lions, jaguars, bobcats, javelinas, (bighorn) sheep, deer, black bears — those animals often move far to find what they need,” he said, adding that a hardened border wall like the one Trump is proposing would be “substantially more threatening.”

Another study conducted in Arizona, published in 2014, used motion-sensitive cameras to monitor animal — and human — movement along the border. The researchers found that pumas and hog-nosed coons, or “coati,” were more likely to appear in places without a barrier. But human crossers appeared in equal numbers whether there was a barrier or not.

Constant noise and traffic from Border Patrol and other law enforcement activity is another threat to border wildlife, studies found. Even in areas where gaps in the fence could allow animals to get through, there are wide-open gravel roads constantly patrolled by border agents. At dusk, agents often set up mobile, generator-powered floodlights. That activity has steadily increased as border enforcement budgets have soared.

Flesch, the Arizona biologist, says all the gaps in the fence have definitely lessened environmental impacts; that's especially true in Texas, where there is only 110 miles of it. Black bears, for example, have been able to continue their recent comeback in the Lone Star State after being hunted to near extinction, and even a few jaguars — more prevalent in Mexico — have been spotted in the United States in recent years.

Free movement of wildlife is especially important after droughts or natural disasters that can wipe out subpopulations, Flesch said.

“The only species we know that’s going to make it through the wall are people,” he added.

Competing agendas

For more than 70 years, state and federal government and conservation groups have been buying up land along the border to preserve habitat for endangered animals. Now, much of that same land is bisected by the border fence.

The section of the fence in Hidalgo is one of the clearest indications of those competing agendas. It sits on the edge of the Lower Rio Grande National Wildlife Refuge, located on land that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service bought some 40 years ago. That means it’s federal property – so it became an easy target decades later when the Department of Homeland Security was looking for land to build the border fence.

In testimony to Congress in 2008, the former manager of that wildlife refuge, Ken Merritt, said the land “was thought of somewhat like low-hanging fruit.” That phrase had appeared in a Homeland Security PowerPoint presentation the previous year, referring to land the federal government already owned and therefore wouldn’t have to condemn to build the fence. (Merritt, who worked at the agency for 31 years, was forced into early retirement after refusing to sign off on the border fence plan.)

Ygnacio Garza, a former Brownsville mayor and chairman of the Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission, summed it up this way: “You’ve spent money to build this environmental corridor, and now you’re gonna go right through the middle of it and put up a wall.”

The parks and wildlife commission, which also has spent decades acquiring land along the border to protect habitat, rebelled against the Bush administration’s border fence plan, too. According to a 2008 report in the Austin American-Statesman, park commissioners voted to reject an offer from the federal government to donate $105,000 to a nonprofit land trust in exchange for more than 2 acres of a state-owned wildlife management area where it wanted to build part of the fence.

“Construction of a border fence has impacts to fish and wildlife resources that could not adequately be compensated for by the offer of compensation,” a department staffer said at the time.

But the state ultimately lost that battle. The federal government condemned the property, a Texas Parks and Wildlife Department spokesman said.

The federal government did do some things to try to help endangered species when it built the border fence, including rerouting some sections. At a segment near Brownsville that runs through a private nature preserve, there are small openings at the base of the fence every 500 feet or so meant to let small wild cats through – particularly the ocelot, whose numbers have dwindled to fewer than 100 in the United States.

Sonia Najera, grasslands manager for the Nature Conservancy, calls the openings "cat holes." They're the size of a piece of printer paper. She's never seen an animal actually use one.

How are cats, or any other animals, supposed to find them?

"That's a good question," Najera said.

Reveal Example 2: <https://revealnews.org/article/hey-california-oklahoma-had-3-times-as-many-earthquakes-in-2014/>

Earthquakes are synonymous with California to most Americans, but West Coasters might be surprised to learn they're far from the new center of the seismic landscape in the United States.

Oklahoma recorded more than three times as many earthquakes as California in 2014 and remains well ahead in 2015. Data from the U.S. Geological Survey shows that Oklahoma had 562 earthquakes of magnitude 3.0 or greater in 2014; California had 180. As of Jan. 31, Oklahoma recorded 76 earthquakes of that magnitude, compared with California's 10.

According to the Advanced National Seismic System global catalog, in 2014, Oklahoma even beat Alaska, the nation's perennial leader in total earthquakes, though many small events in remote areas go unrecorded there.

In California, earthquakes always have been relatively common, but in Oklahoma, they were much more rare – at least until 2009.

Earthquakes magnitude 3.0 and higher, 2000 to Jan. 31, 2015 Scientists have long assumed that the rate of earthquakes in a given location was constant, but the rapid increase in seismic activity in places like Oklahoma is fundamentally altering how experts plan for seismic risk. The U.S. Geological Survey's current models of seismic hazards intentionally ignore quakes attributed to "induced seismicity." Play: 2000 – Jan. 2015 Play: 2000 – Jan. 2015 Sources: U.S. Geological Survey National Hazard Model, Northern California Earthquake Data Center and UC Berkeley Seismological Laboratory

And though Oklahoma has had the most dramatic increase in earthquakes, other states such as Kansas, Texas, Ohio and Colorado also are seeing more "induced seismicity" – earthquakes likely triggered by human activity.

So far, earthquakes have proven much more deadly on the West Coast. In California, 63 people were killed in the 1989 Loma Prieta quake, and about 60 died during the Northridge event in 1994. None of the recent Midwest quakes have resulted in deaths. But the changes in the Midwest are so significant that the country's top experts are being forced to fundamentally rethink their approach to seismic risk.

"A fundamental assumption of the old maps was that everything stays the same. Now we're challenged with the earthquakes rates varying with time," said William Ellsworth, a seismologist for the U.S. Geological Survey who is part of a group studying new ways to understand the hazards of induced earthquakes. "Everybody realized that this was an appropriate thing to do because they didn't know what to do."

Numerous studies agree that wastewater disposal from hydraulic fracturing, or fracking, is a major factor in increasing seismic activity.

Massive amounts of water, along with other fluids, are used in the fracking process to break rocks, release natural gas and push it to the surface. That water, along with brine pulled from those rocks, comes back to the surface and has to go somewhere. So drillers inject it into underground disposal wells. In Oklahoma, more than 50 billion gallons of wastewater went into disposal wells in 2013 alone, according to the Oklahoma Geological Survey. The fracking process itself also has been linked to earthquakes, though those generally have been smaller than those associated with wastewater disposal.

The areas facing new earthquakes share a significant burst of drilling activity and pre-existing geologic faults. Heavily drilled areas such as North Dakota's Bakken formation, which aren't located near faults, have not seen the same increase in earthquakes.

Earthquakes magnitude 3.0 and higher, 2000 to Jan. 31, 2015

Oklahoma had more than three times as many earthquakes of magnitude 3.0 and higher than California in 2014, but only occasional earthquakes reported before 2009.

The largest Midwest quake in recent years – a magnitude 5.7 – was centered near Prague, Oklahoma, on Nov. 5, 2011. The city of 2,400 people is about 2 miles east of the Wilzetta fault system, and in 2011, it had several active wastewater disposal wells nearby.

A 2013 article published in the journal Geology linked the Prague earthquake with wastewater injection wells. According to state records, six homes were destroyed and 20 sustained major damage. A chimney collapsed through the roof of one house, injuring the woman inside. (She's now suing two oil companies for her injuries. Both companies deny responsibility for triggering earthquakes.)

The Oklahoma Geological Survey said in a 2013 statement that the Prague earthquake sequence was most likely a natural occurrence. The agency's interim director, Richard Andrews, and top seismologist, Austin Holland, could not be reached for comment despite repeated attempts.

Although most people are familiar with earthquake magnitudes, seismologists pay more attention to the intensity of ground shaking in assessing and predicting the damage an earthquake might cause. The Prague earthquake generated shaking up to intensity VIII, which the U.S. Geological Survey says includes "considerable damage in ordinary substantial buildings with partial collapse. Damage great in poorly built structures."

That means that similar ground shaking near an urban area such as Oklahoma City or the state's two major universities in Norman and Stillwater could cause extensive damage.

And seismologists say larger quakes in Oklahoma are certainly possible, though Ellsworth said there is more risk associated with frequent smaller earthquakes than rarer large ones.

“A 6 would surprise no one,” Ellsworth said. “You wouldn’t be shocked if a magnitude 7 were to occur.”

The U.S. Geological Survey’s current maps of seismic hazards intentionally ignore earthquakes believed to be influenced by human activities because the agency hasn’t known how to quantify the risk.

Now scientists and engineers are trying to find a way assess the potential hazard of these new earthquakes.

Building codes and insurance companies nationwide look to the geological survey to estimate the probability that a certain area will experience dangerous ground shaking as the result of earthquakes. Buildings can be designed to withstand even heavy shaking, but the costs to do so make it impractical in places that don’t have a history of earthquakes.

To determine which areas must meet that higher construction standard, a consortium of engineers, architects, construction manufacturers and other experts called the Building Seismic Safety Council uses the geological survey’s hazard models to develop recommended maps that eventually make their way into the building codes used by almost all local jurisdictions.

For decades, the risk for a given area was based on a 50-year period. But the latest wave of quakes challenges that thinking. As gas exploration and wastewater injection migrate into new areas, the earthquakes move as well. How should a building be insured that might be at risk for earthquakes for the next five years, but never after that? Or where there is currently no earthquake risk, but there might be in the future?

A U.S. Geological Survey team led by seismologist Mark Petersen is working on significant changes to the national hazard model to begin to address those questions. The team will propose several options for how to model earthquake risk in the next year, rather than over 50 years.

“It changes so rapidly that by the time it’s implemented, the seismicity patterns and rates have changed,” Petersen said.

But changes to local building codes won’t happen anytime soon. The seismic recommendations for building codes are updated every five years, and the Building Seismic Safety Council is poised to close the latest cycle at the end of February, using older geological survey data that doesn’t take into account the rash of new earthquakes. The soonest the new hazard models could be incorporated into the International Building Code is 2024, said Nico Luco, who represents the U.S. Geological Survey on the seismic council.

“It’s a very dynamic problem. It’s something that doesn’t fit well with the standard building code approach,” Luco said.

And changing the building code won’t address the biggest potential problem with induced earthquakes: the existing stock of buildings in areas that have never considered seismic risk.

“Your main issue is that you’re elevating the risk for everything that’s already there, and building codes don’t really do as much for that,” Luco said.

David Bonneville, a San Francisco structural engineer and chairman of a Building Seismic Safety Council committee on building code recommendations, said he doesn’t expect local governments to mandate changes on their own “unless something really bad happens.” If a larger quake “affected some small city in Oklahoma that has no seismic resistance at all, you can bet that will get people’s attention.”

Jim Greff, Prague’s city manager, said he and many other residents still haven’t gotten around to fixing all the cracks in their drywall, but the city isn’t yet considering action on its own to change its building codes.

“I still think it’s a low-risk hazard compared to a tornado coming through and doing a lot of damage compared to a big earthquake,” he said.

Greff said he’s not sure whether wastewater injection near the faults is responsible for the earthquakes. He’s looking to the state’s Corporation Commission and geological survey to make that determination.

“They’ve been injecting wastewater for way more many years than we’ve had earthquakes. Why is it all starting now, I don’t know,” he said.

In fact, injection at one of the wells near Prague had been going on for 17 years before the 2011 earthquake, the Geology article noted. Although most cases of induced seismicity begin soon after wastewater injection starts, the authors theorized that the cumulative injection over time finally crossed a critical pressure threshold that caused the nearby fault to slip.

The Oklahoma Corporation Commission regulates oil and gas production and wastewater disposal in the state and has shut down 19 disposal wells since 2013 due to concerns about earthquakes, said Matt Skinner, the commission’s spokesman.

The commission has not officially acknowledged that disposal wells have caused specific earthquakes in Oklahoma.

Skinner said his agency is aware that induced seismicity in general is real and accepts that seismologists agree that wastewater disposal is the primary concern. So the agency is working with the Oklahoma Geological Survey to regulate well operators in new ways to address the increase in earthquakes.

New wastewater wells that are within a 6-mile radius of the epicenter of an earthquake magnitude 4.0 or higher must operate under a “yellow light” permit that allows the commission to immediately stop injection if more earthquakes occur. One such “yellow light” well near the Kansas border was shut down Tuesday after a magnitude 4.1 quake, the Tulsa World reported.

“This is a constantly evolving program,” Skinner said. “None of this is to be viewed in any way as, ‘Oh, look, we have an answer.’ It’s not.”

Reveal Example 3: <https://revealnews.org/article/who-is-the-wet-prince-of-bel-air-here-are-the-likely-culprits/>

Los Angeles officials have steadfastly refused to identify the Wet Prince of Bel Air, the homeowner who pumped an astonishing 11.8 million gallons of water during a single year of California's crippling drought.

The city said naming water-wasting customers wasn't in the public interest, even after Reveal from The Center for Investigative Reporting found last fall that 100 residents of wealthy neighborhoods on the Westside of L.A. were pumping millions of gallons of water apiece, drought or no. And one household in Bel Air was using enough water for 90 families.

So we decided to figure it out ourselves. The hard way. Using satellite images, an algorithm developed to track drought and deforestation, and equations used in landscape planning, we identified seven of the most likely culprits.

Call these mega-water users Bel Air's wet princes and princesses. The estimates aren't precise enough to pinpoint one specific estate as the worst. But, not surprising considering the neighborhood, this thirsty group includes some of the wealthiest people in L.A., and they live in some of the city's most expensive homes.

Their collective offenses on the water-guzzling front: fountains, swimming pools, an artificial waterfall, acres of lawn, subtropical landscaping, thousands of flowers, dozens of bathrooms.

The mega-users broke no laws, because the city's Department of Water and Power allows ratepayers to pump as much water as they can pay for. But a new state law will subject mega-water users to hefty fines in future drought emergencies.

At the top of our list of water-pumping royalty based on our analysis:

Former Univision CEO Jerrold Perenchio, owner of the 42-room French-style chateau from TV's "The Beverly Hillbillies." His compound of lawns, formal gardens, woodlands and vineyards would require at least 6.1 million gallons of water per year.

Investment banker and onetime telecommunications tycoon Gary Winnick, owner of the 28,000-square-foot "Bellagio House" near the Bel-Air Country Club. The grounds, famous for floral gardens, require at least 4.6 million gallons per year.

Movie producer Peter Guber, who is also part-owner of the Golden State Warriors and the Los Angeles Dodgers. His wooded estate on a ridge above the Hotel Bel-Air needs at least 2.8 million gallons per year.

Other Bel Air mega-users, according to the analysis:

Wal-Mart heiress Nancy Walton Laurie, at least 2.3 million gallons per year;

Former Warner Bros. Chairman Robert Daly, at least 2.1 million;

Beny Alagem, owner of the Beverly Hilton Hotel, at least 2 million;

And soap opera producer Bradley Bell and his wife, U.S. Ambassador to Hungary Colleen Bell, at least 2 million.

Most of the mega-users declined to comment or failed to respond. But two acknowledged their high use and said they were trying to do better.

Daly said that since 2014 he had cut water use by 35 percent on his estate, tearing out lawns and employing other conservation measures. “I am very conscious of it,” he said of his water use.

After receiving our email, Alagem, the hotel owner, hired a landscaping company to reduce water usage significantly, said spokeswoman Marie Garvey.

Here are details on big water users in Bel Air:

The ‘Beverly Hillbillies’ mansion, Nimes Road

Owner: Trusts controlled by Jerrold Perenchio, who is among L.A.’s wealthiest men and biggest political contributors. A onetime Hollywood talent agent, he produced hit movies (“Blade Runner”) and television shows (“All in the Family”), then built Spanish-language Univision into the nation’s fifth-largest TV network. Today he is worth $2.7 billion, according to Forbes magazine.

Public records show Perenchio has made more than $45 million in political donations, giving millions to California governors Gray Davis and Arnold Schwarzenegger and to Republican Party strategist Karl Rove’s PAC. Recently he gave more than $2 million to a super PAC supporting Republican presidential candidate Carly Fiorina.

House: The 21,500-square-foot French-style chateau has 10 bedrooms and 12 baths, according to the Zillow real estate website. Beneath it is an “underground motor court” for 30 cars, according to the Los Angeles Times. The mansion’s compound contains a helipad and several other homes, one with four bedrooms and 7,900 square feet of living space. The house’s facade and gardens were the backdrop for television’s “Beverly Hillbillies” comedy.

Grounds: About 13 acres with a tree-lined drive, pool, tennis court, fountain and extensive formal gardens. The biggest lawn covers about a quarter of an acre, aerial photos indicate. Half an acre is planted in vineyards.

Water use: Between 6.1 million and 12.3 million gallons per year, according to our estimates.

Perenchio didn’t respond to an email describing our findings. When we called in April, a Perenchio assistant said, “We don’t comment on anything.” A satellite photo shot in July showed that some of Perenchio's lawns had turned brown since the spring, suggesting a decrease in irrigation.

Casa Encantada, Bellagio Road

Owner: A corporation is listed, but investment banker Gary Winnick is registered to vote there and is identified in news accounts as the house's owner.

A former co-worker of junk bond king Michael Milken at the Drexel Burnham Lambert investment bank, Winnick later set up his own bank, now called Winnick & Co. In 1997, he founded Global Crossing Ltd., which hoped to link the U.S. to the world with undersea fiber optic cables. In 1999, the Los Angeles Business Journal said Winnick was the richest person in the city. But Global Crossing collapsed in 2002, and Winnick helped pay a $324 million legal settlement to investors and employees who claimed fraud.

House: A 64-room Georgian mansion also known as "Bellagio House," it is the former home of hotelier Conrad Hilton. The mansion is perhaps "the finest home west of the Mississippi," the Los Angeles Times once wrote. Built in 1938 and extensively renovated in the 1990s, it has seven bedrooms, 20 baths, a pool house, a 15-car garage and a grand terrace with fountain. In 2000, it sold for $94 million; it was reportedly listed in 2013 for $225 million, but went unsold.

Grounds: About 8 acres on a hill above the Bel-Air Country Club. In the 1990s, it was abloom with 40,000 flowers, the L.A. Times wrote. There's also a pool, tennis and basketball courts and a putting green. From the air, its lawns appear significantly greener than the nearby golf course fairways.

Water use: Between 4.6 million and 9.3 million gallons of water per year.

Winnick did not respond to an email and follow-up phone call.

Lausanne Road compound

Owner: Trusts associated with film and sports impresario Howard Peter Guber. CEO of Mandalay Entertainment, he produced "The Color Purple," "Batman" and other hit films. With Magic Johnson and other investors he bought the baseball Dodgers out of bankruptcy. As co-owner of the Warriors, he has pushed to move the basketball team from Oakland to San Francisco.

House: The former residence of actress Mary Tyler Moore, it has four bedrooms and 14,000 square feet of interior space. Also on the property is the 2,700-square-foot "Yoga House," a studio for Guber's wife, Tara.

Grounds: About 9 wooded acres with a pool, tennis court and private footpath to the Hotel Bel-Air in the canyon below. Architectural Digest in 2013 described the property's grounds as "jungly," featuring "lush ferns, clouds of jasmine and trumpet vine, and much more subtropical vegetation."

Water use: Between 2.8 million and 5.5 million gallons of water per year.

In response to an email, a Guber spokesman telephoned and asked for details of our findings. He offered no comment.

Strada Vecchia house

Owner: A trust for Nancy Walton Laurie, an heiress to the Wal-Mart fortune. Forbes magazine puts her net worth at $4.5 billion. She and her husband are the former owners of the St. Louis Blues professional hockey team. They also own a Missouri bank, an 18,000-square-foot mansion near Las Vegas and a “super yacht” that the Daily Mail says is worth $200 million.

House: Six bedrooms, four baths and 8,500 square feet of interior space, according to Zillow. Built in 1958, it sold in 2001 for $20 million.

Grounds: About 5 acres with a pool, tennis court and half-acre lawn surrounded by trees. The house is adjacent to the controversial “Starship Enterprise” house, a 30,000-square-foot “giga-mansion” that developer Mohamed Hadid is building, to the distress of his neighbors. Laurie sued Hadid for damaging one of her eucalyptus trees during construction. Other neighbors, including actress Jennifer Aniston, also have complained about the project.

Water use: Between 2.3 million and 4.6 million gallons of water per year.

A lawyer for Laurie didn’t respond to an email and phone calls.

Bellagio Road mansion

Owners: Robert Daly, former chairman of both Warner Brothers and the Los Angeles Dodgers, and songwriter Carole Bayer Sager (“That’s What Friends are For”), winner of both a Grammy and an Academy Award.

House: A Georgian-style mansion with 11 bedrooms, eight baths and 11,600 square feet of interior space, according to Zillow, it has a 500-foot-long driveway and views of both the city and the Pacific Ocean. In 1998, at the height of the Monica Lewinsky scandal, President Bill Clinton attended a fundraiser at the house, and singer Barbra Streisand gave a “passionate defense” of the embattled president, the San Francisco Chronicle reported.

Grounds: The house is on a heavily wooded, 4-acre hilltop with a pool shaped like a half-moon. A central lawn covers about half an acre.

Water use: Between 2.1 million and 4.2 million gallons per year.

In an interview, Daly said he pays close attention to water use, which he estimated at about 4 million gallons per year. “I have been a responsible person,” he said. “I can’t help the fact that I own a lot of property.”

As the drought worsened, Daly said he has replaced lawns with artificial turf and pebbles. Since 2014, he said, his usage has dropped 35 percent.

Bel Air Road mega-mansion

Owner: A corporation associated with entrepreneur Beny Alagem, a founder of Packard Bell computers and owner of the Beverly Hilton. Alagem is building a new hotel, the Beverly Hills Waldorf Astoria, next door to the Beverly Hilton.

House: The 45,000-square-foot mansion, designed by famed architect Robert A.M. Stern and built in 2006, is the 49th-largest house in the U.S., according to the World Heritage Encyclopedia.

Grounds: About 3 acres with three fountains, an oval swimming pool, formal gardens and a lawn measuring nearly half an acre.

Water use: Between 2 million and 4 million gallons per year.

Alagem's spokeswoman said he is stepping up his conservation efforts. "We take your report very seriously," she said in a phone interview.

North Carolwood Drive compound

Owners: Soap opera producer Bradley Bell and Colleen Bell, Democratic Party fund-raiser and U.S. ambassador to Hungary. Bradley Bell is executive producer of "The Bold and the Beautiful," perhaps the world's most popular daytime TV drama. Colleen Bell is a former TV producer who raised $600,000 for President Obama's re-election campaign, records show. Obama attended a 2012 fundraiser at their home and later named Colleen Bell ambassador to Hungary. Republicans opposed the nomination, saying she had little knowledge of Hungary.

House: The 10-bedroom Spanish Colonial Revival mansion was featured on the cover of the 2008 book "The Legendary Estates of Beverly Hills." Built in 1926 for a silent film actor, it was the home of rock star Rod Stewart in the 1980s.

Grounds: The 5-acre hilltop property incorporates the former estate of actor Gregory Peck, although Peck's home has been razed. The compound features a tree-lined lawn, palm trees, formal gardens and what Architectural Digest called "the estate's pièce de résistance": an artificial waterfall that in three sections cascades down a steep hillside.

Water use: Landscaping would need between 2 million and 3.9 million gallons of water per year, according to estimates. The estimate doesn't account for the waterfall.

Through a spokeswoman, Bradley Bell declined to comment.

How and why we did it

Despite a wet winter that eased the five-year drought, California still faces the prospect of water shortages. That's why the issue of excessive residential water use is important.

"Outdoor use of drinking water can be one of the most wasteful practices there is," said Tracy Quinn, policy analyst at the Natural Resources Defense Council. There's no good reason for allowing homeowners to pump unlimited amounts, she said.

In the original story in October 2015, we reported that the 25 biggest known residential water users in the state were in wealthy neighborhoods of Los Angeles' Westside.

Bel Air, an enclave of wealth and celebrity, was the home not just of the state's largest known residential water customer, but of four of California's top five. Over a 12-month period ending April 1, 2015, their usage ranged from 7.4 million to 11.8 million gallons per year. An ordinary California family uses about 132,000 gallons per year.

Citing privacy concerns, the city refused to make their names public. At the same time, the city's tough water conservation law imposes hefty fines for such minor offenses as watering lawns on the wrong day of the week and publicizes the names of those violators.

The story prompted outrage in and outside Los Angeles. One group of residents took up what Los Angeles Times columnist Steve Lopez called a "drought posse" to roam Bel Air's roads looking for the elusive Wet Prince. Their grassroots effort was in vain.

Instead it took a few fancy digital tools, and quite a bit of math, to sleuth it out.

We began by identifying large properties in Bel Air where landscaping is exceptionally lush and green. That's one sign of heavy water use.

To do that, we obtained from the U.S. Department of Agriculture specialized aerial photographs of the area shot on May 14 and 15, 2014, the most recent available at high resolution. The images were multispectral, meaning they depict light from wavelengths invisible to the human eye.

To identify individual properties, we overlaid a Bel Air real estate parcel map. ATTOM Data Solutions, a real estate data service, provided us with property ownership information.

Then we used an algorithm called the Normalized Difference Vegetation Index, or NDVI, to single out those properties where plant life was particularly healthy.

Scientists use NDVI calculations to assess the density of the earth's green vegetation. The index measures a side effect of photosynthesis: Healthy plants typically reflect more near-infrared light than red light compared to plants that are drought-stressed.

We then calculated the median NDVI for each parcel in Bel Air, noting big properties with particularly lush landscaping. We subtracted the footprints of buildings to make sure we measured only the landscaped area, not the entire lot.

We weren't satisfied with just one measurement so we used a second technique to pinpoint heavy irrigation: the relative wetness of the soil. This technique, called the "tasseled cap transformation," was developed by scientists to track the moisture levels of soils from space. We used multispectral photographs taken between the dates used in the original Wet Prince story – April 1, 2014, and April 1, 2015 – by NASA's Landsat 8 satellite to compute what's known as a median "tasseled cap wetness" value for each Bel Air parcel.

Combined, that information allowed us to zero in on the biggest Bel Air estates that scored highest for both healthy vegetation and especially wet soil. But different types of landscaping require different amounts of water to stay green, so we still couldn't tell how much water was being used on those properties.

Fortunately, horticultural experts have developed a way to deal with that problem. The Simplified Landscape Irrigation Demand Estimation – known as SLIDE – takes into account that grass, for example, requires more water than woody shrubs.

We used mapping software to measure the area of each property that was devoted to grass, trees or shrubs that appeared to require irrigation. Then we put each area through the SLIDE Rules, if you'll pardon the creators' pun, to estimate the minimum and maximum amounts of water needed to irrigate the property. These estimates do not include water pumped for swimming pools, fountains or household use.

We knew this was a novel use for these different technologies and calculations – one borne of necessity since L.A. city officials wouldn't help us out. So we ran it by three experts in remote sensing – that's analyzing data from aerial images. They all said what we did checked out.

"It sounds like your methodology is doing what you want to do and makes sense," said Laurence Carstensen, head of the geography department at Virginia Tech. "And obviously you've got scientific basis for the amount of water needed for this land cover."

Mother Jones Sample 1: <https://www.motherjones.com/politics/2008/04/even-pope-cant-shame-court-death-penalty/>

The pope came to town yesterday to speak to the nation's Catholic faithful, including some 9,000 people on the White House lawn in a crowd that included the president and 146 Catholic members of Congress. Conspicuously missing were the very prominent Catholic Supreme Court justices, who were too busy at the courthouse paving the way for states to kill a few more prison inmates, in a decision that won't be washed away by a lifetime of Hail Marys.

Today's Supreme Court not only has a conservative majority, but a Catholic one. Scalia, Thomas, Alito, Kennedy and Roberts are all relatively devout Catholics, yet while the pope was exhorting Americans to be nicer to people, every last one of them voted to continue lethal injection, regardless of how painful it might be or how much their church opposes it. These are the very same guys who we are chomping at the bit to overturn Roe v. Wade.

No word on whether the justices will meet later with the Pontiff, but we can only hope that His Excellence might remind the brethren of how little tolerance he has for "cafeteria Catholics."

After all, if they're going to let faith guide their decisions, they should at least be consistent about it. The rest of American Catholics seem to be figuring that out. According to the latest polls, nearly half of all American Catholics now oppose the death penalty, up from only 20 percent in 1994. In fact, this year, U.S. bishops used Holy Week to kick off the American bishops' latest campaign to end the death penalty. Perhaps when the justices do see the Pope, it ought to be for confession.

Mother Jones Sample 2: <https://www.motherjones.com/politics/2019/03/beto-orourke-raised-a-stunning-6-1-million-in-the-first-24-hours-of-his-campaign/>

That’s more than any other Democrat running for president—so far.

Beto O’Rourke raised a massive $6.1 million in the first 24 hours of launching his presidential bid, his campaign announced Monday morning, outpacing the launch day haul of every other candidate for the Democratic nomination, including Bernie Sanders.

“In just 24 hours, Americans across this country came together to prove that it is possible to run a true grassroots campaign for president—a campaign by all of us, for all of us, that answers not to the PACs, corporations, and special interests but to the people,” O’Rourke said in a statement.

The stunning figure comes after some expressed skepticism at O’Rourke’s decision to enter the already-crowded field of Democratic presidential hopefuls last week. O’Rourke’s roll-out specifically drew criticism on social media, with some saying his video announcement hinted of sexism. Others, including Sen. Amy Klobuchar, notably eye-rolled O’Rourke’s “born to run” quote from the Vanity Fair cover story that coincided his announcement.

But O’Rourke’s fundraising announcement on Monday will likely dispel some of the initial cynicism.

For more on what you need to know about O’Rourke’s candidacy—including how he transformed fundraising models and why it may ultimately be best not to overthink his loss to Sen. Ted Cruz—head to our story here.

Mother Jones Sample 3: <https://www.motherjones.com/politics/2013/11/john-bolton-only-option-iran-war/>

It's refreshing when a neoconservative says what he really wants. Hours after the Obama administration announced an interim agreement with Iran regarding its nuclear program, John Bolton, the hawk's hawk of the neocon crowd (remember when he practically yearned for terrorists to blow up Chicago with a nuclear device to teach Barack Obama a lesson?), was busy penning a piece for The Weekly Standard decrying the deal as an "abject surrender" of President Obama to the mullahs of Iran. Bolton essentially makes the familiar (and hyperbolic) conservative case that any deal that does not start with Iran trashing all of its nuclear equipment is yet another Munich moment. From this perspective, there can be no bargaining with Tehran—that is, no diplomacy. The only acceptable path is absolutist demands from the United States and its allies and total capitulation from Iran. Now what are the odds of that yielding success? Bolton is honest enough to acknowledge that talking, as he sees it, will lead to nothing but an Iran armed to the teeth with nuclear weapons. Thus, his article ends with this assertion: "in truth, an Israeli military strike is the only way to avoid Tehran's otherwise inevitable march to nuclear weapons." Thank you, Ambassador, for such candor. He is acknowledging that from his perch there is nothing Obama can do short of giving Bibi Netanyahu the green light for a military assault on Iran. Consequently, Bolton's critique of the details of the negotiations deserves little attention, for he's set on war, not diplomacy—a view that may well be reflected throughout hawkish conservative circles.

If this is not enough to discount Bolton's take on the interim accord, there's also history. Prior to the US invasion of Iraq, he declared, "We are confident that Saddam Hussein has hidden weapons of mass destruction and production facilities in Iraq," noting that the US role in Iraq after any invasion would be "fairly minimal." For years afterward—after no WMDs were found in Iraq—Bolton continued to claim the WMD case for that war was justified. Despite this lousy track record, Bolton, like other neocons, is hardly bashful when it comes to making dire statements about Iran's nuclear programs and dismissing ongoing efforts at peaceful resolution. But give him credit for being clear about his bottom-line: let's skip all the chatting and get right to war.

Reveal Sample 1: <https://revealnews.org/blog/one-year-ago-we-asked-for-border-spending-records-were-still-waiting/>

The Center for Investigative Reporting sued the Department of Homeland Security in January over records related to land purchases, fence construction and other border spending. While President Donald Trump is visiting prototypes of a wall he wants to build along the southern U.S. border today, his administration continues to withhold records showing how much the government already has paid for border land and fence construction. With so much taxpayer money at stake and few details about how it would be used, Reveal from The Center for Investigative Reporting wanted to know how much the government has spent to acquire land and build barriers along the border and where that land was. We've done a lot of reporting on the wall, including publishing the most comprehensive map of where about 700 miles of fencing exists now. We even turned the border into sound so you can hear the presence and absence of barriers. Meanwhile, the basic question of how much the government has paid remains unanswered. Nearly one year ago, reporter Andrew Becker asked U.S. Customs and Border Protection for records showing the costs of buying land and building fence along the country's 2,000-mile border with Mexico. After the government dragged its feet for months on our request, we filed a lawsuit in U.S. District Court seeking the records. Our suit seeks records including the amount of money Customs and Border Protection and the Department of Homeland Security has paid to landowners to acquire private property for border fence construction, costs for existing fence construction, costs for land condemnation actions and locations of land parcels acquired by the government, as well as names of who received the funds. Because some border condemnation cases have lasted many years and the policy issues involve several presidencies, we asked for records dating back to 1996. The federal Freedom of Information Act requires the government to release records in a timely manner. There are a few narrow exceptions to releasing records, and this case isn't one of them. Trump made building a wall along the border with Mexico a signature campaign promise, repeatedly vowing to make Mexico pay for it. Officers who've worked along the border and directed policy for Customs and Border Protection have said the project isn't needed, with one calling it "an incredible waste of taxpayer money." Some estimates have put the price tag for a complete wall at more than $70 billion. As part of our video series called The Divided, we told the stories of activists and ranchers who are on opposite sides of the issue but are committed to humane treatment. In southern Arizona, where long stretches of desert and extreme heat have killed thousands of migrants, water is the common ground between pro-immigrant activists and a rancher who backs the wall. Walling off even more of the border also will affect animals in the region. Right now, a mix of vehicle barriers and pedestrian fencing covers only about one-third of the nearly 2,000-mile U.S.-Mexico border. Even with existing gaps in the fence, experts say the barriers have made it harder for animals to find food, water and mates. Many of them, such as jaguars, gray wolves and ocelots, already are endangered.

Reveal Sample 2: <https://www.revealnews.org/article/fda-warns-caffeine-powder-sellers-about-products-potential-lethality/>

One-sixteenth of a teaspoon of caffeine powder is equal to a 12-ounce cup of coffee, but a single teaspoon can lead to vomiting, anxiety and heart problems.

The Food and Drug Administration this week issued warnings to five distributors of caffeine powder, saying their products are dangerous and potentially deadly for consumers. Regulating caffeine is more or less a mess in the United States, as our video below explains.

According to the FDA, the “difference between a safe amount and a toxic dose of caffeine in these pure powdered products is very small.” Imagine using common kitchen tools to measure out a safe dose of powdered caffeine: 1/16 of a teaspoon is equal to a 12-ounce cup of coffee, but a single teaspoon can lead to vomiting, anxiety and heart problems.

A tablespoon, for that matter, will kill you.

In the FDA’s letter to one caffeine manufacturer, PureBulk Inc., the agency notes how unlikely it is that consumers would have a 1/32-teaspoon measuring tool – the serving size amount that PureBulk suggests.

Some consumer groups, such as the Center for Science in the Public Interest, say the FDA should go further and ban caffeine powder. After all, two healthy, young men died after overdosing on pure caffeine in 2014.

Currently, the substance is widely available online. In fact, when we set out to buy pure powdered caffeine for our video, it couldn’t have been an easier process. Just a few clicks and a couple of days later, pounds of the potentially lethal stuff showed up at our office door.

Banning caffeine is tricky for the FDA, however. As our video explains, caffeine is regulated differently depending on where it’s added. When it comes to energy shots and powders, caffeine is considered a dietary supplement and has been virtually unregulated. This is why, prior to Tuesday, the agency had only warned consumers of its dangers.

That soon may change. In June, the Ohio Legislature passed a bill banning the retail sales of pure powdered caffeine. Earlier this year, six U.S. senators urged the FDA to do the same.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has announced a $2.85 million settlement in an age discrimination lawsuit against Seasons 52, part of the Darden family of restaurants. In announcing a $2.85 million settlement in an age discrimination lawsuit today, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission's acting chairwoman congratulated her civil rights agency.

"I am very proud of the relief the EEOC has obtained here ... to ensure that applicants and workers do not face this sort of discrimination in the future," Victoria Lipnic, a longtime commissioner appointed as acting chairwoman by President Donald Trump last year, said in a statement.

But Lipnic actually voted against bringing the lawsuit in the first place.

It's an example of the kind of ambitious civil rights lawsuit that may not happen once Trump's other nominees are confirmed and the five-member commission swings from a Democratic majority to a Republican one.

Back in 2015, the commission's general counsel wanted the go-ahead to sue Seasons 52, part of the Darden family of restaurants, for systematically discriminating against job applicants over the age of 40 at restaurants nationwide.

Lipnic and the other Republican commissioner voted against filing suit, while three Democrats voted for it, clearing the path that led to the nearly $3 million settlement.

In the end, more than 135 job applicants gave testimony that Seasons 52 managers asked them their age and made comments such as, "Seasons 52 girls are younger and fresh," according to the commission. The settlement also requires the company to change its hiring processes and pay for a compliance monitor to make sure it doesn't discriminate anymore.

A Seasons 52 spokesman said in an email: "We are pleased to resolve this EEOC matter. Putting this behind us is good for Seasons 52, good for our team members and good for our shareholders." Its parent company, Darden, also owns the Olive Garden and LongHorn Steakhouse chains.

After Lipnic was appointed acting chairwoman in early 2017, a Reveal review of commission votes found that she voted against pursuing 20 lawsuits in her previous seven years as a commissioner. The other Republican commissioner serving with her voted against more than twice as many cases.

If a majority of the commission votes against bringing a lawsuit, the agency's findings of discrimination may never become public. The commission discloses its investigations only if there is a lawsuit or if an employer agrees to it as part of a prelitigation settlement, which is rare. Republicans and business groups have criticized the commission for pursuing large-scale, systemic cases, favoring a focus on reducing the commission's backlog of individual complaints. A Republican majority on the commission may lead it in that direction, but two Trump nominees still are awaiting Senate confirmation. One of them, retired Army Lt. Col. Daniel Gade, once called the idea of women in ground combat "laughable," though he said his views have changed. Trump also nominated a new general counsel, Sharon Fast Gustafson, who has signaled that she may be less aggressive in filing lawsuits and pursuing national systemic cases. If she is confirmed and steers away from cases such as the one against Seasons 52, they might not even come to the commission for a vote.

The Mother Jones article "Why Is the Colorado River Running Dry?" from the November-December 2023 issue delves into the multifaceted crisis affecting one of the most critical water sources in the Western United States. This detailed investigation highlights several key factors contributing to the Colorado River's alarming depletion.

1. Historical and Policy Failures: The article outlines how historical agreements and outdated policies have exacerbated the current water crisis. For example, the 1922 Colorado River Compact, which allocated water rights among seven states based on overestimated water flow data, has led to unsustainable water usage patterns (Mother Jones) (Mother Jones).
2. Agricultural Practices: A significant portion of the river's water is used for agricultural purposes, particularly in growing water-intensive crops like alfalfa. This crop alone consumes more than half of the water diverted from the river, which the article argues is an unsustainable practice that needs urgent reevaluation (Mother Jones) (Mother Jones).
3. Climate Change and Drought: Prolonged drought and rising temperatures due to climate change are reducing the river's flow. The snowpack in the Rocky Mountains, which feeds the river, has diminished, leading to less water during the crucial melt periods (Mother Jones).
4. Urban and Industrial Demands: The article also discusses how urban expansion and industrial activities, including oil and gas extraction, further strain the river. The increasing population in cities like Las Vegas and Phoenix demands more water, while industrial activities pollute and consume substantial quantities of water (Mother Jones).
5. Ecological Impact: The environmental consequences are severe. The reduced flow affects ecosystems and wildlife dependent on the river. For instance, native fish species and riparian habitats are threatened by the changing water levels and quality (Mother Jones).
6. Legal and Political Challenges: Addressing these issues is complicated by legal and political challenges. Water rights and management are contentious, with various stakeholders, including states, agricultural interests, and indigenous groups, often at odds over solutions (Mother Jones).

The article underscores the urgency of rethinking water management strategies, advocating for policies that prioritize sustainable use and conservation to ensure the river can continue to support both human and ecological needs.

The article "There's a Facebook Coronavirus Post Going Viral Claiming to Be From Stanford. Don't Believe It" published by Mother Jones, debunks a viral Facebook post that falsely claims to provide official COVID-19 advice from Stanford University. The article highlights the spread of misinformation during the pandemic and emphasizes the importance of verifying information from credible sources.

Beginning

The article opens by describing the viral post, which includes several claims about COVID-19 symptoms and preventive measures. For example, it falsely states that if you have a runny nose and sputum, you have a common cold, not COVID-19, which supposedly only causes a dry cough. It also claims the virus can be killed by sunlight or temperatures as low as 26-27 degrees Celsius, and that sneezes from infected individuals travel only about 10 feet before falling to the ground. These points are quickly debunked by experts who explain that such simplistic diagnoses and measures are misleading and not supported by scientific evidence (Mother Jones) (Mother Jones).

Middle

The article then discusses the broader issue of misinformation during the pandemic. It points out how social media platforms like Facebook and Twitter have struggled to control the flood of false and toxic content. The article quotes experts who explain that the proliferation of misinformation is driven by a lack of authoritative sources, high public anxiety, and the human tendency to share information as a way of coping with uncertainty. This environment creates opportunities for misinformation to spread, as people are more likely to share content that seems helpful or credible, even if it is not (Mother Jones) (Mother Jones).

End

In conclusion, the article emphasizes the need for individuals to practice "information hygiene" by critically evaluating the sources of information they encounter online. It advises against sharing posts that sound suspicious or lack credible backing. The article closes by urging readers to rely on trusted sources such as the CDC and WHO for accurate and up-to-date information about COVID-19, and to avoid spreading unverified claims that can contribute to public confusion and panic (Mother Jones) (Mother Jones).

By detailing the specific false claims and providing expert commentary, the article aims to educate the public on the importance of verifying information and the dangers of misinformation, particularly during a global health crisis.

Thanks. Can you summarize all of the examples of misinformation the article discusses?

ChatGPT

The article "There's a Facebook Coronavirus Post Going Viral Claiming to Be From Stanford. Don't Believe It" discusses several examples of misinformation circulating during the COVID-19 pandemic. Here are the main examples highlighted:

1. Symptom Misidentification: The viral post claims that if you have a runny nose and sputum, you have a common cold, and not COVID-19, which allegedly only causes a dry cough. Experts explain that COVID-19 symptoms can vary and can include a runny nose, making this claim false and misleading (Mother Jones) (Mother Jones).
2. Temperature and Sunlight: The post falsely claims that the virus is not heat-resistant and will be killed by temperatures as low as 26-27 degrees Celsius (about 77 degrees Fahrenheit) and that it "hates the sun." Experts counter this by noting that while UV light from the sun can disinfect surfaces, such simplistic assertions about temperature are not scientifically accurate. The virus can survive in a range of temperatures (Mother Jones) (Mother Jones).
3. Sneezing Distance: Another false claim in the post is that a sneeze from an infected person can travel about 10 feet before dropping to the ground and becoming non-airborne. The general rule provided by health experts is to maintain a distance of about six feet from others to reduce transmission risk, but the dynamics of droplet spread are more complex than the post suggests (Mother Jones).
4. Drinking Water: Earlier misinformation, spread via chain emails and social media, suggested that frequently drinking water could help prevent infection by "washing" the virus into the stomach where it would be killed by stomach acid. This advice is unsubstantiated and incorrect, as it oversimplifies how viral infections occur and spread (Mother Jones).
5. Facebook and Social Media Misinformation: The article also discusses how social media platforms have been inundated with false information about the pandemic. The spread of misinformation is exacerbated by the lack of authoritative sources, public anxiety, and the human tendency to share information to make sense of uncertain situations (Mother Jones) (Mother Jones).

These examples illustrate the dangers of spreading unverified information, especially during a health crisis, and underscore the importance of relying on credible sources for accurate and up-to-date information.
